

An Almost Ordinary Summer

In this positive, feel-good LGBTQ comedy from Italy, two families don't realize they're being brought together for a wedding, and especially not one for their respective, aging patriarchs.

Farinelli

The first musical performers to attract manic adulation—the first rock stars, really—were castrati, who paid a very high price for their operatic wealth and fame. The greatest of them all is the subject of this opulent and fanciful biopic.

The Invisible Witness

A locked-room mystery with a twist: A slickly successful businessman wakes up next to his dead lover and becomes the chief suspect. His defense lawyer's never lost a case, but can even she help him?

The Man Who Bought the Moon

Lovers in romantic comedies always promise each other the moon, but a Sardinian fisherman somehow actually acquired it—and now an American agent must pass as a Sardinian, track him down, and figure out how.

Piranhas

A harrowing tale of gang violence, based on the novel by Roberto Saviano (Gomorra), that tracks a naïve group of teens as they enter the ferocious and unforgiving world of Neapolitan organized crime.

Additional films we recommend:

Lest We Forget

In this remembrance project based on a traveling photo exhibition for public spaces, German-Italian photographer and filmmaker Luigi Toscano spends a whole year meeting with hundreds of Holocaust survivors around the world to share their stories.

Pavarotti

One of the few classical performers to attain household name status, Luciano Pavarotti's life and career as the world's most popular operatic tenor is explored in this documentary by director Ron Howard.